The city sells water to about 270,000 people — a figure that has doubled since the 1990s. Long gone are Laredo's famous days of vaqueros on the open range. Today, its old Western historic downtown sits dilapidated in its center while traffic clogs the freeways of the sprawling city beyond. Nearby, the Port of Laredo, the nation's largest inland port, processes more than $250 billion in annual trade with Mexico on trucks and trains.
